Smart launcher feature pack apk. Smart launcher setup. Smart launcher price.

Tuesday September 13, 2022 11:55 am PDT by Sami Fathi Apple this week released iOS 16, the latest version of iOS with a new customizable Lock Screen, major new additions to Messages, and enhancements to Mail, Maps, and more. Other than the headlining features, there are a number of quality-of-life changes, improvements, and new capabilities baked into iOS 16 that help improve the iPhone experience. We've listed 16 hidden features and changes... Media Platforms Design Team If looming baggage costs and stronger airport security measures have you in a tizzy, you're not alone. Things we once took for granted when flying, such as complimentary beverages and checked luggage, are fading fast. Most U.S. airlines charge at least $25 to check a bag, and some even charge for carry-ons exceeding backpack-size—but there's no need to panic. Learning how to pack efficiently is the key to lightening your load (but not your wallet). Here, our travel experts share their tips to streamline your packing for a stress-free vacation. Advertisement - Continue Reading Below Avoid packing pitfalls by only bringing items that have an 80 percent minimum chance of being used—but be sure to plan before you pack. "Lay out everything that you want to pack on your bed and take a good hard look," suggests Samantha Brown of the Travel Channel. "The way you can avoid packing, say, three floral tops when you only need one. It's only when you lay your entire ensemble in front of you that you see where you've made mistakes and can make the appropriate cuts." 2 Put your clothes on a diet. "Choosing thin clothing that packs flat over thicker, more bulky items makes a huge difference in how much you can fit in your suitcase," says Susan Foster, author of Smart Packing for Today's Traveler. Instead of packing a heavy sweater and jeans, try more travel-friendly options like a micro-fleece pullover and pants in lightweight, weather-resistant fabric. Diana Lane, an associate with Geiger & Associates, a Florida-based destination marketing firm, loves the versatility of lightweight sarongs, which can be worn as skirts, various styles of dresses, shawls, swimsuit coverups, shoulder bags or even used as a blanket. "There aren't many items that give us quite this much bang for the buck," she says. Can't bear to part with that lucky ski sweater or full-length overcoat during the trip? When traveling with bulky clothing items is unavoidable, make it a rule to wear the most room-eating garments on the plane. After all, who can't use a little extra protection from the chilly on-flight air conditioning? The secret to looking great once you disembark has as much to do with the type of clothing you pack as with how much shut-eye you get on the plane. Your best bet? Choose wrinkle-resistant fabrics that dry quickly, such as washable silk, nylon and micro-fibers. Cotton is generally less forgiving, as it wrinkles easily and takes longer to dry—especially denim. However, if you love cotton, Brooks Brothers has stylish lightweight cotton blouses specially designed to withstand wrinkling. If you arrive at your destination stress-free but some of your clothes aren't as lucky, try this trick: Hang the item in the bathroom while you take a shower and let the steam work out the wrinkles. If that doesn't work, try Brown's secret weapon—a spray-on de-wrinkler. Brown swears by Downy Wrinkle Release, which is often sold at newsstand stores inside the airport. 6 Pack for compatibility. "Let go of the idea that you have to take a different outfit for each day," advises Foster. "The key to packing light is selecting versatile and interchangeable pieces." Foster chooses her clothes by focusing on one basic color, such as black, white, brown or khaki, then adds variety with additional tops and accessories that have more color and personality. This approach allows you to pare down the number of garments you need while making it easy to change up your look with creative mixing and matching. Increase your packing options with expandable or convertible luggage like this pack from Osprey. In the event that your added gifts and souvenirs leave you facing hefty overweight charges (think $30 and up) at the check-in counter, you can simply unzip the gear bag from the bin and check in two separate bags. Spice up a basic outfit with compact accessories, such as belts, jewelry and scarves. These suitcase space-savers add instant color and can easily take an outfit from day to night. Kelly Vrtis, an organizational travel spokeswoman for The Container Store relies on a lightweight Pashmina shawl as her go-to accessory while traveling. "You can use it over the shoulder, around your elbows or even wear it as a scarf." One easy way to gain more luggage space? Reduce the number of shoes you bring along. Brown only packs one pair of flats and one pair of heels for every trip. "Both can be used to make pants, shorts or a dress casual or dressy," she says. When packing, place shoes toe-to-heel in the bottom of your luggage along the edge, and make the most of the empty spaces inside your footwear by filling them with fragile items wrapped in socks. 10 Ensure clothes stay put. Specialized packing systems can keep clothes from shifting and rubbing together in your suitcase, reducing the chance of wrinkling. There's a variety of available products that accommodate everything from socks to sports coats—The Container Store offers the Eagle Creek Pack-It line, which features a great collection of organizer tubes, cubes and folders. Flight 001, a store that specializes in innovative travel products, also carries an organizational packing system called SpacePak. Most of these systems have mesh panels or see-through sides so you (and security) can easily see what's inside. "Packing envelopes and cubes are extremely efficient and have allowed me to actually add more to my luggage," Brown says. 11 Take and bring back your travel treasures on the flight back. Patagonia offers an extra-lightweight travel tote that you can hand-carry or wear as a backpack, then stuff into its own pocket when it's no longer needed. Is a Bill of Lading the Same as... By John Nemo, Founder and CEO, LinkedIn Riches@JohnNemoPRLinkedIn has come a long way. From its early days as little more than a glorified online resume platform for professionals seeking employment to a "one stop shop" for industry news, training and networking worldwide, LinkedIn continues to try and adjust to the changing professional workplace. The latest example is with its internal messaging system, which recently added a "smart" new feature that helps make conversing with prospective clients or employers on the platform even easier. "Ever need a little inspiration and help to respond to incoming messages in a timely manner?" LinkedIn's Julie Inouye asked in a recent blog post. "LinkedIn smart replies will suggest personalized, relevant responses to make it easier for you to keep the conversation going, no matter how busy you are. The next time your teammate asks if you'd like to attend an event next week you may see smart reply suggestions, such as "Yes," "What time?" or (emojis). "Yes, emojis have made their way into your LinkedIn inbox. "Ultimately, real-time communication is where we're headed online," LinkedIn Sales Solutions Executive Doug Camplejohn told me in a recent podcast interview. "Rather than sending something and then waiting for hours or even days to get a response. "Here's why this approach makes sense: When you meet someone for the first time in real life, you have a casual, back-and-forth conversation. You build some rapport, asking your prospect questions about his or her work (and non-work) life. You break the ice, building up a comfort level as the prospect gets to know, like and trust you. In that vein, LinkedIn's messaging experience now feels more like texting with a friend instead of exchanging formal-sounding emails. Back and forth you go, even having the ability to see the other person typing and replying in real-time. LinkedIn's built-in "smart replies" feature (as this video demonstrates) comes up with words, phrases or even emojis you can click on and insert into your messages based on the other person's replies. It's a slick, easy and intuitive feature, and I've noticed it becoming "smarter" over time as I use it more often in LinkedIn messages. As nice as added features like this one are when it comes to messaging your ideal connections or potential clients online, it's still about the substance and camaraderie of your communication style more than anything else. As one example, here are some best practices for messaging what I define as your "warmest" sales leads on LinkedIn. Just like in real life, you still need to provide value, build up rapport and earn the right to ask a new connection for his or her time, interest and attention. No amount of messaging features will replace these timeless truths of communication and conversation best practices, so make sure you follow those online with LinkedIn just like you do in real life!
